

You can picture GIMBER perfectly.
Now try to describe it.

A narrative diagnosis — what happens when a brand nails the feeling and forgets the point.

GIVE THE BRAND ITS DUE

First — it's beautiful.

Sun, water, linen, long European lunches.
GIMBER's world is immaculate and instantly its own — you've probably saved a shot of it without ever clocking what's in the bottle.

THE GAP

GIMBER has a mood.
It never sharpened the message.*

* There is a message — “healthy, but with a kick.” At home, the culture already shares it, so the feed never has to say it out loud.

One account. Keep scrolling and every single post is immaculate — and every single post is selling something a little different.

One account. Keep scrolling and every single post is immaculate — and every single post is selling something a little different.

THE MESSAGE

healthy, but with a kick.

NEVER BROUGHT INTO FOCUS

- 01. THE KICK
a functional energy drink.
- 02. THE NOT-ALCOHOL
a sober-curious statement.
- 03. THE VIBE
a lifestyle mood brand.
- 04. THE CRAFT
an artisan sipper.
- 05. THE FLAVOURS
a playful flavour range.

THE REVEAL

The only thing in focus is the photography.

Take the craft away, and the feed has nothing left to say.

ACT TWO • KOREA

The mood crossed the border.

Did the meaning?

Same brand, two hemispheres. The photography carries perfectly — both feeds are gorgeous. But a mood that was never said out loud has to survive on its own now.

BE → KR

WHAT KOREA DID

It didn't come into focus.
The blur just moved.

The same soft message slid toward the nearest legible shelf — wellness, natural, organic. The fun didn't vanish; "your natural kick" is right there. It just got harder to understand.

@gimber_kr — the same
blur, re-centred on wellness

THE FIX

Healthy, but with a kick.

BRING IT INTO FOCUS —

Healthy is the baseline.
Pleasure is the point.

Everyone else on the shelf promises — slim, pretty, well. GIMBER is the one that's a pleasure. Said out loud — pineapple, matcha, chili, that European summer — it needs no culture to translate.

WHERE THE VALUE IS

Anyone can see the blur.
Sharpening it is the work.

WHAT ANYONE SEES

The scatter is on GIMBER's own public feed. The gap is real and visible to anyone who scrolls — no invention required, nothing cherry-picked.

THE WORK

Naming the fix — pleasure over promise, one sharp core that travels — is the strategic call. That's what a narrative brings, and it's the part a competitor can't just re-shoot.

IN ONE LINE —

A mood gets you noticed. A message gets you remembered.

GIMBER already built the hard part — a mood the world screenshots. A message is the part that compounds, crosses borders, and can't be re-shot. It just needs saying out loud.

GIMBER — when a moodboard hits its ceiling.